Thousands of olive trees were uprooted in al-Mughayyir following a military order issued by Apartheid General, Bluth: 300 dunams were cited, but 620 were destroyed. Meanwhile, settlers carve new roads for more land grabs — all under army protection. Thread. >>

1/ A few days ago, we published a post describing the “shaping operations” of Apartheid General Bluth, east of the village of al-Mughayyir, during which thousands of olive trees belonging to the village's residents were savagely uprooted. >>

2/ These "shaping operations" followed Bluth's signing of a military order titled "Order Regarding the Taking of Security Measures No. 25/25." The order stated that the area covered was just under 300 dunams, marked in red on the attached map. >>

3/ In practice, the work was carried out jointly by the army and local settlers who own heavy machinery. The uprooting operations lasted for several days. >>

4/ Following mapping we conducted on the ground, we can now say that the actual area where the army and settlers uprooted trees stands at about 620 dunams — more than double the area included in the order. >>

5/ In addition, settlers have begun — and continue — to carve an entirely new road, with the aim of seizing thousands of dunams between al-Mughayyir and the extremely violent outposts east of the Shiloh settlement. >>

6/ We assume that along this illegal road, settlers will soon establish yet another outpost, whose purpose will be to further tighten the noose around the village of al-Mughayyir. >>

7/ Work at the site has been ongoing for over a week and a half, leaving no doubt that Apartheid General Bluth and his subordinate, Col. 'Anan Fares - recently appointed commander of the Binyamin Brigade, under whose responsibility this area falls >>

8/ both were, and remain, fully aware of what is happening on the ground: settlers, under army protection, are uprooting olive trees on hundreds of dunams not covered by the military order. >>

9/ Both officers bear personal responsibility for this crime. One can only hope that the day will come when they will be brought to justice.
